Shoppers can update their style now and pay over time, without late or hidden fees

SAN FRANCISCO – September 3, 2020 – Affirm, a more flexible and transparent alternative to credit cards, today announced a partnership with one of the first digitally native men’s apparel brands, Bonobos. Whether shopping for themselves or the men in their lives, eligible Bonobos customers can now pay for their purchase over three months, without interest or late fees.

“Affirm eliminates the complexity, uncertainty, and hidden fees at checkout and empowers consumers to confidently buy the things they want and need,” said Silviya Martincevic, Chief Commercial Officer at Affirm. “Whether buying an off duty pant to feel comfortable and stylish while working from home, or performance golf polo to get back in the swing of things, Bonobos shoppers will now know exactly how much they’ll pay each month and when they’ll be done paying.”

Bonobos is one of the first digitally native men’s apparel brands. Since its beginning days of designing chinos with a better-fitting curved waistband, Bonobos has expanded to include a full wardrobe of better-fitting men’s clothing, for every guy, for every occasion. By offering Affirm, Bonobos is bringing customers payment flexibility at checkout, enabling more people to buy better-fitting pants, suits and blazers, golf apparel, and more.

Bonobos joins Affirm’s network of over 6,000 retail partners, which includes over 900 leading fashion brands like Oscar de la Renta, Eddie Bauer, Rag & Bone and Fred Segal. Offering Affirm at check out drives overall sales, increasing average order value by 85%. Trusted by 5.6 million customers, Affirm approves on average 20% more customers than its competitors and 67% of its loans are from repeat customers.

Approved shoppers can pay with Affirm at checkout on Bonobos.com on orders over $100 today.
